

"Then shall you (the people) turn again, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between he that serves God and he that serves Him not." (Malachi 3:18)

COME OUT OF HER MY PEOPLE THAT YOU RECEIVE NOT OF HER PLAGUES

BLINKERS

A lot of Americans have mental blinkers. Blinkers are the leather cups that are placed over the eyes of horses who pull wagons, buggies, or plows. They are also called "blinders," but I kinda like the older term, "blinkers."

The blinkers cover the sides and rear of the horses' eyes to block their vision, forcing them to see only forward. Blinkers reduce the chances of the horse seeing anything to their side or rear that might distract and spook them. Horses can be spooked by new things they see. It is a natural defense built into the horse to react to things that he doesn't recognize; things like a predator hiding in wait to attack him. He reacts/spooks automatically.

As long as the horse has his master watching for him, the blinkers work fine. But if the horse was wild and free, on his own, blinkers would be a disaster for him. He wouldn't be able to keep watch for predators.

People can have their mind's eyes mentally "blinked." When they listen to propagandists and fear mongers it can program their minds to not be able to perceive danger. People who are blinked in this way are unable to observe and look around to see what is happening around them - much like the blinked horse. They just look where they are programmed to look. They can't see the whole picture (i.e., reality). Their eyes see only where they have been trained to look. They are unaware of things they should see.

EYES AND EARS

5. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

Isaiah 35:5

Please remember that you are not part of a Machine. You are children of God.

You are created by God, not by the Machine. You are "fearfully and wonderfully made" - complete, equipped, capable, and free. You can do all things through Christ who strengthens you (Phil. 4:13). Plus you can inspire others to know this. You are not a slave to the wrong thinking of The Machine's false gods and false prophets.

The way to find freedom is to find truth, answer God's call, realize that you have work to do, and be thankful for it. You have a gift called "life." Life is reality. You must contend with reality. Life can be compared to a baseball game. You need to step up to the plate and be ready to swing at the ball. Don't expect to hit a home run first time at bat. That comes later, after practice. But you must do your best - even if you only make it to first base at the beginning.

Reality is the proverbial ball that we must keep our eye on. Reality is what God wants us to see. Learning how to see and catch, and hit that ball is our purpose in life. As a parent, reality is the ball we must teach our children to see and catch. The Beast System Machine throws lies and deceptions at us - hoping to strike us out ... expecting us to expend ourselves swinging at phantoms.

We need eyes that are not blinked so we can perceive reality and avoid phantoms. God place us in his world. His law is the schematic that shows us how to fit into that picture, how to not be deceived (blinked). Seeing reality, and appreciating that you are a child of God, and learning to love Him as He loves you - this is called "truth" and "freedom."

"You shall know the truth, and the truth will make you free."

John 8:32

The following article by Jon Rappaport helps reveal the deception process we see in America today. People are being "blinked" so that they can't see reality. They are being turned into mere cogs on gears in the giant Machine.

You need to realize that you are NOT a creation of the machine. No! You are a child of God. Your purpose is to learn how you fit into God's creation - NOT how to fit into the man-made machine (Beast System).

Jon calls this machine "the Pavlovian Program."

THE PAVLOVIAN PROGRAM

by Jon Rappaport

Under the surface of this global civilization, a war is taking place. The two opponents hold different conceptions of Reality. On one side, those who claim that we must operate purely on the basis of stimulus-response (like Pavlov's dogs); on the other side are those who believe there is a gigantic thing called FREEDOM.

Phase One of the war is already over. The stimulus-response people (the Pavlovian programmers) have made their case. In Phase Two, people are now waking up to the far-reaching and grotesque consequences of the Pavlovian Program.

(Ivan Pavlov was a Russian psychologist who studied how the minds of animals and men could be conditioned to respond reflexively - without thinking. His classic study for which he is best known was his conditioning of the minds of dogs to salivate with sudden hunger at the sound of a bell.

He conditioned them by ringing a bell just before he would feed them. Soon they would react automatically to the sound of the bell in expectation of food. They would begin to salivate when they heard the bell. It was a programmed reflexive response.)

IT WORKS ON PEOPLE TOO

From the moment the first leader of the first clan in human history took charge, he busied himself with this question: 'What can I say and do that will make my people react the way I want them to.' He was the first Pavlov. He was the first psychologist, the first propagandist, the first mind-control boss. His was the first little empire. Since then, only the names and locations have changed.

A "thought-form" is a picture-plus concept in the mind that tends to guide behavior. Thought-forms can be confused with truth, replacing truth/reality with a planted thought.

A dominant thought-form in civilization today is: universal rule through gigantic, highly organized structures; e.g., governments and mega-corporations that owe no allegiance to anyone but themselves.

Imagine a few thousand such corporations with interlocking boards and directorates; colluding with super-regional governments and their honeycombed bureaucracies; combined with regional armies, intelligence agencies and technological elites, hooked to a global surveillance operation, in control of media, cooperating with the largest organized religions on Earth.

Imagine all this as essentially one huge Machine---and you see the thought-form in its wide-screen version.

Functions and compartments defined and specialized at every level, and all coordinated in order to carry out central policy decisions. It is like a huge Tower of Babylon.

As to why such a thought-form should come to dominate human affairs, the simplest explanation is: because it works. But beneath that answer, for those who can see, there is much, much more.

Citizens can come to think that "effective" and "instrumental" and "efficient" are more important considerations than truth and reality. Keep building, keep expanding, keep consolidating gains---and above all else, keep organizing.

Such notions and thought-forms replace reality itself.

The Machine has come to the fore. All official problems focus on how the individual can be fitted into the structure and function of The Machine. The Machine is the only essential thing. People are not essential. Everything and everyone exists to feed the Machine. It is a social construct.

Are we meant to be just social constructs in a matrix?

FUEL FOR THE MACHINE

Populations have been undergoing a quiet revolution. We can cite some of the reasons: television; schools; job training and employment requirements; the Surveillance State; government organizations that follow an agenda, a policy; overflowing advertising.

Yes, it's all geared to produce people who are artificial constructs.

And this is just the beginning. There are a number of companies who are dedicated to measuring "audience response" to ads and other public messages. I'm talking about electronic measuring. The use of bracelets, for instance, that record students' emotional responses to teachers in classrooms, in real time. (Bill Gates shoveled grant money into several of these studies.) Thus curriculum can be geared to appease students - a dangerous metric.

Then there is facial recognition software geared to the task of revealing how people are reacting when they sit at their computers. Push-pull, ring the bell, watch the dog drool for his food. Stimulus-response.

It's not much of a stretch to envision, up the road a few years, whole populations more than willing to volunteer for this kind of mass experimentation. But further than that, we could see society itself embrace, culturally, the ongoing measurement of stimuli and responses.

"Yes, I want to live like this. I want to be inside the system - the Machine. I want to be analyzed. I want to be evaluated. I want to accept the results. I want to be part of the new culture. Put bracelets on me and nano-sensors in me. Measure my eye movements, my throat twitches that indicate what I'm thinking, and my brain waves. Watching a movie should include the experience of wearing electrodes that record my second-to-second reactions to what's happening on the screen. I like that. I look forward to it..."

In such a culture, "Surveillance State" would take on an Orwellian dimension.

"Sir, I want to report a malfunction in my television set. I notice the monitoring equipment that tracks my responses to programs has gone on the blink. I want it reattached as soon as possible. Can you fix it remotely, or do you need to send a repair person out to the house? I'll be here all day..."

People will take pride in their ongoing role as social constructs, just as they now take pride in being able to "friend" people on Facebook, or in owning a quality brand of car. People will also be offended or afraid of anyone who refuses to actively participate in the system.

The thought process behind this, in so far as any thought at all takes place, goes something like: "If I'm really just a bundle of responses to stimuli and nothing more, then I want to be inside a system (the Machine) that champions that fact and records it...I don't want to be left out in the cold."

Here is a sample school situation: for six months, Mr. Jones, the teacher, has been video recorded, moment by moment, as he instructs his class in English. All the students have been wearing electronic bracelets, and their real-time emotional responses (interest, boredom, aversion) have also been monitored and recorded. A team of specialists has analyzed the six months of video, matching it up, second by second, to the students' responses. The teacher is called in for a conference.

"Mr. Jones, we now know what you're doing that works and what you're doing that doesn't work. We know exactly what students are positively reacting to, and what bores them. Therefore, we're going to put you into a re-ed seminar, where you'll learn precisely how to teach your classes from now on, to maximize your effectiveness. We'll show you how to move your hands, what tone of voice to use, how to stand, when to make eye contact, and so on..."

Mr. Jones is now a quacking duck. He will be trained how to quack "for the greater good." He is now a machine toy. Whatever is left of his passion, his intelligence, his free will, his spontaneous insights, his drive to make students actually understand what they're learning...all subordinated for the sake of supposed efficiency.

Think this is an extreme fantasy? See the Chicago Tribune, June 12, 2012, "Biosensors to monitor students' attentiveness":

"The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, which has poured more than $4 billion into efforts to transform public education in the U.S., is pushing to develop an 'engagement pedometer.' Biometric devices wrapped around the wrists of students would identify which classroom moments excite and interest them -- and which fall flat."

"The foundation has given $1.4 million in grants to several university researchers to begin testing the devices in middle-school classrooms."

"The biometric bracelets, produced by a Massachusetts startup company, Affectiva Inc, send a small current across the skin and then measure subtle changes in electrical charges as the sympathetic nervous system responds to stimuli. The wireless devices have been used in pilot tests to gauge consumers' emotional response to advertising."

"Gates officials hope the devices, known as Q Sensors, can become a common classroom tool, enabling teachers to see, in real time, which kids are tuned in and which are zoned out."

"Existing measures of student engagement, such as videotaping classes for expert review or simply asking kids what they liked in a lesson, 'only get us so far,' said Debbie Robinson, a spokeswoman for the Gates Foundation. To truly improve teaching and learning, she said, 'we need universal, valid, reliable and practical instruments' such as the biosensors."

"The Gates Foundation has spent two years videotaping 20,000 classroom lessons and breaking them down, minute by minute, to analyze how each teacher presents material and how those techniques affect student test scores."

"Clemson received about $500,000 in Gates funding. Another $620,000 will support an MIT scientist, John Gabrieli, who aims to develop a scale to measure degrees of student engagement by comparing biosensor data to functional MRI brain scans [!] (using college students as subjects)."

When you boil it down, the world-view represented here has nothing to do with "caring about students." It has everything to do with the Pavlovian view of humans as biological machines.

What input yields what response? How can people be shaped into predictable constructs? As far as Gates is concerned, the underlying theme, as always, is: control.

In this brave new world, the process of thinking and comparing and independently judging, and the freedom to make individual choices...well, we can't encourage it for a whole society. It's too unpredictable. We don't have time for that sort of thing. No, we have to achieve reduction. We have to seek out lowest common denominators.

This is what universal surveillance is all about; the observation of those denominators and the variances from them---the outlying and therefore dangerous departures from the norm.

"Well, we've tracked Mr. Jones' classroom for a year now, and we've collated all the measurements of reactions from the students. It was a wonderful study. But we did notice one thing. All the students showed similar patterns of reactions over time...except two students. We couldn't fit them into the algorithms. They seemed to be responding oppositely. It was almost as if they were intentionally defecting from the group. This signals some kind of disorder. We need a name for it. Is it Oppositional Defiance Disorder, or is it new? We recommend attaching electrodes to those two students' skulls, so we can get a deeper readout of their brain activity in real time."

Those two students are suffering from a brain problem. They MUST be. Because if they aren't, if they have the ability to choose and decide how to respond, then they have free will, and that can't be measured and controlled.

This suggests an X-factor in man, wherein the flow of chemicals and atoms and quarks and mesons and photons don't tell the whole story. The rest of the story would imply the existence of something that is above and beyond the push-pull cause and effect.

The gatekeepers of this world are obsessed with ruling that out. They guard Reality itself, which is to say, their conception of Reality. They are willing to spend untold amounts of money to make a Pavlovian mindset universally accepted as reality. Because they own that conception.

They are the self-appointed title holders. They are the kings of that domain.

However, the truth is their domain is much, much smaller than they think it is. (Compared to God's domain it is infinitesimal. And in the fullness of time, which is very long, their domain is going to fall and crack and collapse and disintegrate. And all their horses and all their men won't be able to put it back together.

Eventually, a man like Bill Gates will be forgotten. He'll be a small footnote on a dusty page in a crumbling book in a dark room on a remote island. A morbid venal fool who chased, for a brief moment, fool's gold.

There is an irreducible thing. It's called freedom. It is available to every individual. Sometimes it rears its head in the middle of the night, and the dreamer awakes. And he asks himself: what is freedom for?

And then he begins a mental voyage that no device can record, measure, or analyze. If he pursues it long enough, it takes him out of the labyrinth into reality.

Pavlov wrote: "Mankind will possess incalculable advantages and extraordinary control over human behavior when the scientific investigator will be able to subject his fellow men to the same external analysis he would employ for any natural object..."

Pavlov was promoting the idea that whatever an individual perceives and reasons (real or not) will control him. Thus, the individual would allow himself to be a "natural object" - see himself as a mere response mechanism, as planned inputs cause him to behave in various ways.

And then he will have no freedom, no reality, no life.

Bill Gates and other elite planners are working toward this end. When Ray Kurzweil advocates for a soon-coming event' he calls 'the singularity' (the point in the future when computers and Artificial Intelligence [androids]) take over and rule the world) he likes to talk about hooking brains up to super-computers. He is envisioning a process of downloading that goes beyond choice. Somehow, automatically, the brain and the individual (he apparently believes they are the same thing) will receive inputs which translate into imposed knowledge. This is another fatuous version of Pavlov's "stimulus-response."

If researchers developed this technology, elite planners would undoubtedly push it forward. It would be the culmination of their dream.

But the freedom of the individual, his God-given capacity to make wide-ranging choices, is the monkey wrench in the program.

This is why you would have to search far and wide to find, in any school, anywhere, on any level, a course that deeply examines reality and promotes truth - that which sets us free.

Such a study is anathema to the plan.

Freedom comes from observing Reality. Reality is observed by knowing truth; thus truth sets us free.

Now, and in the future, every individual carries that torch or douses it.

"Come out of her my people ..." (i.e., the stimulus-response empire - the Beast System). (Rev. 18:4)

POSTMODERNISM

A popular deception is that 'everything is connected to everything.' This is false "wisdom." I've just described how a false reality is built and the intention behind it. They want us to think that each piece is hooked up to every other part. The parts all 'confirm the truth of the whole.' Constructing such a closed system is like building a hospital where the treatments for patients ensure they will never leave---except in a box. This, loosely, is the teaching of the philosophy of Post Modernism.

The basis of an android is: he tries to solve the problems with which he's presented. He does nothing else. He is programmed to see problems everywhere that need solving. That's all he sees. That is his basic program. Without it, he wouldn't know what to do. And on top of all this, he is fed answers to problems. He is educated to look for pre-set solutions. He is the proverbial hammer that sees only nails.

This is the vision that Gates, Kurzweil, and people like them see as their ideal. Humans, individually, all parts of the giant machine, and the parts (people) just need to be installed into the correct conformation. As parts in their giant Machine, everybody would be neatly controlled and encased in the framework of the Machine.

Well, 'every dog has his day.' But not the Pavlovian dog. He has the same day over and over.

The very worst news for some, and the best news for others is, the individual has the capacity for freedom.

-end.

Addendum

The Beast System wants you to be a meaningless cog in the Giant Machine along with millions of faceless souls installed into it. But you can refuse to become faceless and meaningless. Your life doesn't have to be wasted. You don't have to give yourself to a machine (a matrix) that serves no purpose except to feed on people.

You are worth more than that. Will you be a child of the Beast System, or a child of God? It is your choice.

It is sad indeed for a man to come to the end of his life and realize that in the years allotted him he did nothing in service to God or man - all he did was go round and round on a gear in the Machine ... for what?

How many chances did he have to stand for something real? How many times in his life did he choose to follow the other lemmings and miss his chance to be a pioneer and find a better path?

The Beast System has think tanks with men and women working 24-7 inventing ways to mentally grind you into dust and use you as fuel for the Giant Machine. The Beast System is at war with you. It is a war for your mind. It is a war that Americans are losing.

But people refuse to believe this. They count it a privilege to give their minds to the Machine.

Your mind is a precious gift from God, but it does you no good if you sell it cheap to the Machine.

God has equipped you with a brain, the most amazing organ in the Universe. If used correctly God can even communicate with you via your brain.

But not if you give it to the Giant Machine.
